Cyber illiteracy, the lack of knowledge and understanding about the digital realm, has emerged as a pressing concern in our increasingly technology-driven world. It is not merely an inconvenience but a violation of one's own human rights. In today's interconnected society, access to information and communication through the internet is fundamental to exercising our rights to education, expression, and participation in civic life. Those who are cyber illiterate risk being excluded from these opportunities, which in turn infringes upon their basic human rights. Bridging the digital divide and promoting digital literacy is essential in ensuring that every individual can fully enjoy the benefits of the digital age while safeguarding their inherent human rights." Dr. Adv Rohit Suravase was the speaker for the session.
